

New Book Edited by Guberman, Garson Attorneys Randolph K. Hahn and David L.P. Garson Just Published on Immigration Law Changes in Canada

Toronto, June 20, 2011- Carswell, a Thomson Reuters business, has just released "A Practical Guide to Provincial Nominee Programs in Canadian Immigration Law," a comprehensive study on the differences in immigration law province by province across Canada.

The book was edited by Randolph K. Hahn and David Garson, attorneys at Toronto immigration law firm Guberman, Garson, in response to a trend in Canadian immigration law for provinces and territories to have an increasing influence on the selection of prospective immigrants to Canada. Immigrants now increasingly arrive in Canada after being nominated by a province.

The book offers insight into the changes that have been implemented, opportunities and possibilities of immigrating to Canada through various provincial programs, and the effect of the law on immigration lawyers and foreigners trying to live in Canada.

The 1,000-page Hahn and Garson guide book provides practical tips and information on how the provincial programs work and how to access them.

The book retails at Canadian $120 or U.S. $126.32, and can be purchased on Carswell's website (<http://bit.ly/Carswellimmigration>).
